

Studying macromolecular systems using coarse-grained simulations

Kai Grass

Coarse-grained computer simulations using the ESPResSo package will be used to study macromolecular systems including polyelectrolytes and hydrogels. The complex nature of the interactions leads to a manifold of interesting features that can only be understood with the help of "in silico experiments".